Notes

This recital is in conjunction with my senior thesis where I am writing about the intersection between jazz and hip hop. These two black art forms are intertwined through history and culture but also through a process called sampling. This is a production method where you include an element of a pre-existing recording by someone else in your composition. This process was prominent in the 90's though producers like J. Dilla, Q-Tip & Ali Shaheed Muhammad, Madlib, and so many more.

All the music being played tonight are songs that have been sampled in some of my favorite hip hop records. For example the first song being played "Mystic Brew" went on to be sampled in the Tribe Called Quest song "Electric Relaxation."

Acknowledgements

I first would like to thank my parents for always supporting me though any endeavor I take on, weather it was skateboarding, windsurfing, or football they are always my #1 fan. Not everyone is so lucky to have two parents that care and take such an interest in my life as they do, so thank you for everything. I would not be the person I am today without their unwavering support. To my brother, thank you for always being there to make me laugh when I am down and for being such a fun person to be around. I would also like to thank all my friends both here in New Orleans and from Miami, without the homies support I couldn't be where I am today. Thank you to Jeff Albert for being such a great advisor and mentor throughout this whole process. Wayne Maureau has changed my entire perspective on drumming, I have never had an instructor like him. He has made me a better drummer, but also a better musician as a whole. I know I am going to forget people, but thank you to anyone who has ever supported me in any way!
